on the subject of "Political Education."
Congressman Barthoidt characterized the lack of political education in public schools as a sin of omission. In a monarchy, he said, where the first duty is to obey, instruction as to the rights and duties of citizenship might not be essential, but in a republic such instruction was an indispensable necessity, because the welfare of the country depended upon an intelligent exercise of the franchise.

As an evidence of what he termed gross ignorance with wespect to the simplest political truths, the speaker referred to the astounding spread of prohibition. If the masses of the people, he said, were conscious of the existence of those inalignable individual rights which even majorities must respect as inviolable, prohibition could have never made any headway at all. To be sure, in order to enable people to live in peaceful communities, individuals had to give up part of their natural rights, but such remunciation, even in despotic states, would never be extended to actions which were neither wrong nor immoral in themselves, and which would not interfere with the rights of their neighbors. Whenever this well-defined line was transgressed, either by legislators of time each cand remained only in name.

The consequence would be that one thing was being regulated by law today, another thing to-morrow, and thus violence was done to the very foundation of the State whose complete collapse would be only a question of time.

In conclusion, the speaker argued that it was an easy matter to enlighten youths on those simple questions, and it was high time for teachers to fill this gaping void in courses or study in the interest of an intelligent progress and of the perpetuity of American free institutions. "The German schoolmaster," he exclaimed, "has won the Franco-German war. May the fu-
